Administration

To the Members of the Class of 1957:

I extend my congratulations to you upon the goal which you have attained through the completion of your college course. However, the accomplishment of this goal is merely the opening of a new door as you take another step in this progress of life. Beyond this door you are to join the army of teachers upon whom the preservation of American democracy and way of life depend. To you is to be entrusted the development of the character of the youth of our country. You will be responsible for the education of the children of our community. In fact the future of our society will be dependent upon you. Assume your new role in society with the assurance that you have been well prepared and with the prayer that God will give you the guidance and assistance necessary for success.

Club Activities

It is 10:45 A.M. on Thursday morning. We see the students congregating in the foyer, chatting about their plans for the next hour. Some carry pastry boxes, others hold copies of sheet music, and still others have cameras.

Let us follow this first group as it heads toward a large, airy room. As we enter, we notice a table laden with delicious delicacies. The Literary Club is about to come to order. At the front of the room stands a distinguished-looking visitor, one of the many interesting guest speakers who are included in the Literary Club's program during the year. After speaking with Dr. Regina Madden, the faculty adviser, we learn that other activities of this club include theater parties and discussions of current plays and books.

We leave the Literary Club, and hearing the voices of aspiring young actors, we wend our way toward the Drama Club. This club, under the direction of Dr. John Collins, is preparing for one of the several plays it produces during the year. Here students are becoming acquainted with the techniques and literature of the theater.

Strains of music drifting through the corridors draw us from the Drama Club to the well-attended Music Club. We learn that this club, with Miss Elizabeth O'Brien directing, provides choral and instrumental music for both college and civic functions.

In keeping with these aesthetic pursuits, we decide to visit the colorful room of the Art Club. As we enter, we see displays of traditional and modern paintings. Art Club members are busily sketching from live models as Mr. Robert Bertolli, their adviser, offers suggestions. Around the room are posters and staging for Drama Club productions—the Art Club's current project.

Inspired by this brief taste of our own country's culture, we inquire about the provisions made for the study of the cultures of other countries. For this purpose, we are directed to the Spanish and French Clubs, whose activities are guided by Miss Katherine Barr and Miss Edith Gartland.

Our tour of the clubs of the college takes us next to a nature lover's paradise—a room filled with potted green plants, aquariums, and many charts and models for scientific study. Today the Science Club members, in consultation with Dr. Mary Lynch, are making plans for future activities, some of which are outings, tours of industrial plants, films, and lectures.

We discover that several new clubs have recently been added to meet the varied interests of the growing student body. One of the foremost of these is the Camera Club, whose exhibition of scenes of college life first attracts our attention. Upon visiting this group, we find members busily discussing new techniques of photography to be utilized on their next outing.

We learn also of two other recently established clubs, whose membership is steadily increasing—the Veteran's Club, organized as a result of the influx of veterans to the college, and the Psi Chi Club, organized for those especially interested in psychology. As we visit them, we see that their programs include films and discussions of important topics.

During our inspection of the foregoing clubs, we learned that many of the students are also members of the religious clubs of the college. These clubs—Greek Orthodox, Hillel, Newman, and Protestant Fellowship—meet the spiritual and social needs of the students through films, lectures, discussions, and social gatherings.

Continuing our tour, we pass a room with the sign Chalkdust on the door. Inside, we see students diligently at work laying out copy for the next issue of the college paper. As we talk with these students, we learn that anyone with a talent for writing is invited to share this talent with others through the pages of Chalkdust. During our conversation with staff members, we also note their appreciation for the assistance given to them by Miss Marjorie Holt, their faculty adviser.

Only a few minutes remain to this informative hour in which to complete our picture of the club program of the college. We hasten to the meeting of the Student Government Association. Here, we meet the members of the student executive board and the class councillors, who represent their respective sections. All the clubs are also represented at this meeting. From the topics considered, we learn that this body governs many of the activities of the college. Currently under discussion is the program to be initiated by the Social Service Committee. This committee is planning ways to help worthy citizens of surrounding communities, especially during the Thanksgiving and Christmas seasons.

Although our survey of the clubs of the college was necessarily brief, we became aware of the importance of these clubs to the students. By providing for the varied interests and special talents of their members, the clubs insure a well-rounded and balanced college program.

Fashion Show

Spring 1957 — Season of enchanting fashion —

"Fair Lady" and "tailleur," "sophisticate" and "ingenue." The costume — dress of silk print, jewel colored, and straight coat of linen lined with matching silk. The sheath — slim, of sheer wool in Spring navy, its cape flashing red taffeta from underneath. The afternoon silk — a myriad of polka dots with full skirt and fluffy "pussy cat" bow.

The suit — of tweed in pale gray, the skirt flared gently, the little jacket collared in sparkling white and curved carefully just below the waist. The chiffon — full length, in shades of pale amethyst, rose quartz, and aquamarine, floating dreamily in many panels. The bridal gown — romantically bouffante in delicate lace and tulle, flowing downward into a graceful chapel train. The chapeaux — small, flowering boldly in geranium, violet, and pink.

The wrap — mink, Cerulean and "Breathe of Spring."

Men's Athletic Association

This year in basketball, our senior letter-men are few, with Dick Skinner and Bob Lynch holding down all the honors. Our class can be proud, however, of the fine support we have given our teams over the years. In the past four years, through the dynamic spark-plugging of such men as Bob Currier, the Green and Gold has evolved into a first-rate team. It now retains a favored position among the New England small colleges. Although this section pertains to the men's athletics, we must not overlook the contribution of the women, for it was they who designed the new look in cheerleaders and helped to revive school spirit.

Since we have come to T. C., we have seen our baseball team shape up into a first division club. It was the work of such men as Richy Luccio, Tom Carrigan and Bob Brennan that laid the foundation for today's team. I'm sure that most of us can recall the effective combination we had in our freshman baseball team. It was Skinner behind the plate, Brennan in the hot-corner, Carrigan in right, and Luccio going after the long ball. Our team has made progress ever since. If our current achievements are an indication of those to come, big college baseball in New England had better be prepared. We're on our way!

The men have fought hard in the Student Council for better athletic facilities and a higher budget. This year the fruits of their efforts are manifest. The 1956-57 season for our college sports program has been unique. The loyal backing of the Student Government Association has shown the highest budget in T. C.'s history. Our athletes now travel to away-games in chartered buses; adequate meals are provided; they have the best in new and colorful equipment.

This year the State Teachers College at Boston was invited to become a member of the National Athletic Intercollegiate Association. Our basketball fame has spread as a result of sportsman-like conduct and skillful performance both at home and on distant courts. Among other victories, T. C. fans witnessed a rousing defeat of Rhode Island College of Education. A few days later our N. B. A. bound court-magicians made history with a resounding 109 to 91 triumph over Bridgewater Teachers College. Our record for the season is an enviable one, our best to date: eleven victories, only five losses.

Amid the triumphs which we leave, we should not forget the man that makes all of this success possible. He is our coach; truly a man's man, our own Mr. Sullivan.

Women's Recreation Association

OFFICERS:

Denise (Dagle) Fitzpatrick — President

Helen Zuberin — Vice President

Judith Bolles — Secretary-Treasurer

The Women's Recreation Association is composed of all the women students who belong to the Student Government Association. The Women's Recreation Association meets every Tuesday and Thursday afternoons from three to five o'clock in the afternoon. The program includes the following sports: basketball, volleyball, badminton, tennis, softball, golf, and fencing. The Women's Recreation Association fosters social meetings with other collegiate institutions by holding and attending many play days with various colleges, such as Boston College, Emmanuel, and Simmons. This year, for the first time, the Women's Recreation Association sponsored a student-faculty volleyball game which aroused great enthusiasm in the college. We hope that this event will become a tradition at the State Teachers College at Boston.

An executive board, on which each section is represented, meets at frequent intervals to discuss plans for activities. In this way, many constructive suggestions are brought before the committee and eventually are incorporated into the program. The Association offers the students, therefore, not only a stimulating variety of sports but also the challenge of new ideas and projects.

Retrospect

Class Essay

Our lives are marked by beginnings and endings. The termination of one stage of our being denotes the commencement of another. Sometimes the change in stages occurs so imperceptibly that we have already entered a new period of our lives before we are conscious of having left the previous one. Such is the case when we pass from adolescence to adulthood. At other times, however, the change in stages is indicated more definitely, so that we are aware of the ending of one stage and the beginning of another. Thus it is, as we climax our four years of college training and commence a more significant period of our lives.

As we reminisce on the events of the past four years, we recognize that we have experienced a transformation in our thinking. It should not be otherwise. For the most part, we entered college as adolescents; we leave as adults. The causes for this change cannot be explained fully in simple terms. We have become cognizant of the fact that what we are is a result of many interrelated experiences and influences from within and without.

Some of the influences which have helped to effect the change in ourselves have been in evidence here at the college. We have been trained to think reflectively and deliberately. This habit of reflection should continue through life. Responsibilities which have been placed upon us have helped us grow toward maturity. We were the ones who determined whether our term assignments and projects would be completed in full and on time. Extracurricular activities of various types which we have supervised and in which we have participated have also contributed to our more mature outlook.

The effectiveness of our college training was tested in the laboratory of the classroom. Our student-teaching experiences during several months of our senior year awakened us to the reality and responsibilities of teaching. We became the pattern for children's attitudes and habits. We discovered the way to the heart of a child, and we treasured this discovery. These experiences in the elementary school classroom increased our confidence in ourselves and assured us of our capability in our chosen profession.

During our college years we have been shown the scope and source of learning. We have been impressed with the vast sea of knowledge which reaches beyond the horizons of our imagination. Figuratively, we have only dabbled in the ripples along the shore. We shall spend the rest of our lives in the pursuit and application of knowledge.

We are about to lay aside the garb of the college student to assume the role of classroom teacher. Children, parents, professional colleagues, and community will be looking to us and expecting much of us. We shall be confronted as never before with a world where many people's standard of value is on a materialistic level, and where factions are fighting for their own interests with such subtle but potent weapons as ignorance, prejudice, and hate. Our values must be of a higher order. They must extend beyond the material and the transitory to the eternal. We must ask ourselves the question which everyone must at some time face: "What shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" If we are to combat those forces which work against the salvation of souls, we must adhere to the principles of truth, freedom, and love.

The ancient sage and king, Solomon, at the onset of his reign, humbly prayed for an understanding heart, and it was granted him. We are very much aware of the current need for understanding among nations, groups, and individuals. Our special call is to understand children, and to demonstrate this understanding through sympathetic relations in the classroom.

As we embark on the profession of our election, we may look forward to a challenging lifework. Let us pray that our attitudes and values may be such that the children placed within our care will have grown intellectually and spiritually for having been with us.

—Helen Bartell

Class Poem

The things we all shared together —
these are our memories.
Those who said the four years
would pass quickly were right;
But imprint or value need not be measured by time,
For memories transcend time.
Mere words cannot tell what these years have meant to us.
Reasons lie deep in our minds
and hearts,
Both overflowing with plans formulated, and achievements realized.
Who can tell of eagerness to learn what the wisdom of age
And the fervor of youth can teach us?
We live in the time of the present and look forward to the future;
Yet to derive priceless meanings from memories that will live forever —
Who is to say that this also is not looking forward?

—Gloria Katz

Class Song

We reminisce and think today
Of the joys which could not last,
Of the years so swiftly flown away,
And the close friends unsurpassed.

The echoes of our laughter
Resound from ivy walls;
They tell us that hereafter
We shall praise these hallowed halls.

Yes, Alma Mater, we shall sing
Of all thy lessons wrought,
And pray the coming years will bring
Success for those you've taught.

Forget-Me-Nots

These cautions come from many sources;
We hope you recognize them from the courses
Which you have taken in the past four years
To help you in your teaching careers.

Psychology

Writing on the board is considered an art,
So here's advice to the teacher smart:
Keep facing the class, your back to the wall
To avoid knives, bullets, or a well-aimed spit-ball!

History

One professor chants this refrain:
When children about marks start to complain,
Be calm, be collected, don't put up a fight;
Remember the teacher is always right!

Language Arts

Those red pencil marks or a marginal note
Nothing but failure to a student denote,
Give him confidence enough to make a new try;
It may be his novel next year that you buy!

Mathematics

It's two feet by three feet, covered with green.
Every good teacher is with one seen,
So dig it out from wherever it's stored,
That moth-eaten, faded old flannel-board!

Principles

Always have your lesson planned.
Keep it written, close at hand.
Keep it short, and keep it neat.
Confine it to one side of the sheet.

Arts and Crafts

Encourage creativity as a trait,
But make your subjects integrate,
And while children are under a creative spell,
Have them make your visual-aids as well!

Music

When your supervisor comes to class
To hear each tuneful lad and lass,
Be sure not to ask for volunteers,
Response usually comes for untuneful "dears."

Nature

Children come in with treasures galore,
For ants, toads, and caterpillars they simply adore,
It's your solemn duty to accept them with joy,
Even if the slimy bugs your appetite destroy!

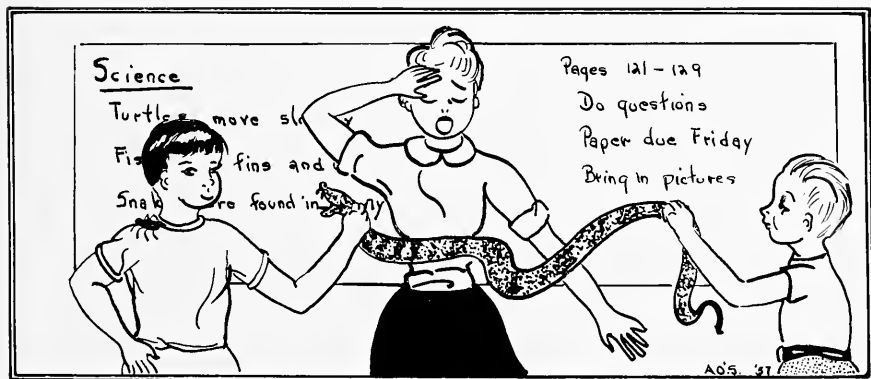

Seminar

Keep your paper work up to date,
And don't let tasks accumulate.
Start right in to do things right;
Avoid this harried teacher's plight!

These words of experience are passed on to you
To help you out as a teacher new,
So be sure these pages are carefully read,
And forget-them-not in the years ahead.

—Ruth Kravitsky

In the Laboratory

The dictionary gives two definitions of the word laboratory. First, the laboratory is a place where chemical or other scientific experiments are carried on. This reminds us of ourselves as student teachers. The second definition, a place where arms and war materials are manufactured, brings to mind our energetic pupils. Indeed, we shall long remember the perplexing trials encountered in student teaching.

The scholars say to experience is to learn. If this be so, we are perhaps the greatest learners of the century, for our experiences have been varied and innumerable. Following in the footsteps of our predecessors, we are setting down in the pages of history, descriptions of never-to-be-forgotten experiences in our lives as student teachers.

First, there is always a young child in the room who appears to be a teacher's delight. His hand is raised at every question. Sometimes, it's raised even before the question is asked. The eager look on his face conveys a knowledge of the answer. The madly waving arm shows a desire to share that knowledge with his friends. Proud and confident, you call his name. Foiled and crushed, you give him permission to leave the room.

Secondly, we have the kind and generous pupil who offers his services in taking care of the room—even if it means staying after school. While dusting the bookcase, he accidentally upsets a stack of books. Switched to watering the plants, he unwittingly pinches the buds off the narcissus bulbs. Transferred to washing the boards, he chances to trip over the water bucket. Finally, demoted to closing the windows, he air-conditions the room permanently by poking the window pole right through a closed window.

The actions of the pupils are not the only interesting topics for discussion. We, the student teachers, did our share of bungling. For instance, there is the student teacher who believes in elaborate audio-visual materials. She has worked into the early morning hours making a large diagram of the solar system—measuring, cutting, drawing, and pasting. Masterpiece in hand, she tiptoes into the classroom on the stroke of eight, and carefully tapes it onto a map. The map is then rolled up away from prying eyes. The morning passes swiftly. At last, the supervisor has come to see "the greatest show on earth." The aim is stated. Proudly, the student teacher reaches up for her work of art. With great enthusiasm, she pulls her diagram—crashing to her feet. Another spectacular gone awry!

Then, there comes a time in the life of a student teacher when she must uphold her unchallenged leadership of the class. The doctor is coming to give the children their polio "shots." In order to prevent a panic, the teacher explains why the doctor is coming and what he is going to do. To quell unnecessary fears, she assures the class that "it doesn't hurt at all." Leading the calm and orderly class to the nurse's office, the student teacher is greeted at the door by the doctor, injection needle in hand. Upon reviving ten minutes later, she learns that the pupils have been taken care of and are awaiting her return in the classroom.

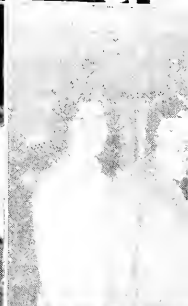

Teaching is, indeed, an enlivening and inspiring profession. Student teaching is all this and more. It is hoped that future student teachers will read the above carefully and be prepared.
